

Recognizing Florida's Health Centers

Federally Qualified Health Centers (FQHCs) are a critical part of the community and remove barriers to care. For 1.8 million Floridians, FQHCs provide integrated preventive and primary care along with mental health, substance use disorder, oral health, vision and social support services.

In observance of National Health Center Week (August 6-12), our team members visited health center locations across the state to share their appreciation for FQHCs and the role they play in keeping communities healthy. Learn more about the value health centers deliver to patients and communities.